The Muslim empire in Spain lasted for centuries, and this civilization had a huge cultural impact on the country, which can still be seen today: Andalus, and Granada with its capital Qutuba (in Arabic Cordoba), are places that are well known for their Islamic heritage. The Omayyad Caliphs came to Spain after they fled from Damascus in 750 A.D. Although they only ruled for a short time, they made a big contribution to the artistic and cultural life of Qutuba. They did the same throughout Spain, and Andalus in particular became well known for the fine buildings of the Caliphs.

The Omayyads built their new capital to be very similar to Damascus. One of the most impressive buildings in Spain is the Omayyad 8th Century Mosque in Qutuba, which was designed to remind people of the city the Omayyads had left. During the time of the Caliphs, Andalus also became very well known for the study of science, philosophy and mathematics. Although the Omayyads made Granada very beautiful too, they are best known for Qutuba, which became a centre of Civilization and a bridge between the East and West.

Although the Muslims later moved out of Spain, their influence can still be seen today; nearly a quarter of modern Spanish words are derived from Arabic. Today there are many Muslims living in Spain, and there are nearly two hundred mosques across the country as the religion flourishes there. As well as the historic older buildings of the Caliphs, there are also much newer ones such as the Ibn Rushd Islamic University next to the Qutuba Mosque.
